

As an employee of a small and independent publisher, I am concerned about the "streamlining" of public information that is occurring worldwide. It is important to the advancement of society and culture that various opinions, points-of-view, interpretations of events are presented to the public so individuals have all the information they need to make informed decisions. I'm opposed to allowing a single corporation to own various media outlets (television, radio, print, etc.) in a given area because it "censors" diverse points-of-view by feeding the public the same information. I hope that the FCC will thoughtfully consider the negative ramifications that such a measure will have on society and determine it to be unfair to the individual and harmful to mankind. I make the appeal that the FCC not pass this measure that allows corporations unprecedented influence over public information distribution.
